Iqi Qoror, an Indonesian artist, explores themes of identity and human connection through his multimedia creations, seamlessly blending painting and embroidery. His artistic style centers around the exploration of trust interwoven with fragments of modernity, reflecting his personal social experiences. Qoror holds a Master's Degree in Fine Art from the Indonesian Institute of the Arts, enhancing his ability to convey intricate themes through art.

Qoror's dedication to pushing artistic boundaries is evident in his experimental and versatile approach, ranging from installations to mixed media paintings. His unique perspective and skill have earned him recognition as one of the fastest-rising stars in the Indonesian art scene.

Demonstrating a growing international profile, Qoror has exhibited in major art hubs such as Singapore, Hong Kong, and Los Angeles. As the South East Asian art market continues to dominate, Qoror has attracted an expanding international collector base.

Mohamad Khayata's works, born out of ten years of displacement, delve into themes of migration, memory, and identity. A tribute to displaced people, Khayata's art reflects effort, hope, and serene melancholy. Forced to flee Syria due to ongoing political conflict, Khayata now resides in Beirut, Lebanon since 2012.

Khayata's monochromatic portraits, depicting women in domestic settings, are meticulously crafted with judiciously applied hues emphasizing intricate details. Delicately layered dry-wash backgrounds evoke vulnerability and emotionality.

His art serves as a resounding call for transformation and unity within Syria. Women in Khayata's works wear madeh, a homemade patchwork quilt symbolizing a personal history with his mother. These madeh inspired his documentary photography series "Stitching My Syria Back," showcased at Journeys Festival International 2016 as part of the "Look Up" project in Leicester, England.
